

Nurses Need a Strong Voice!

Our first bargaining session in the new year brings progress and challenges.

With nurses across our hospital working hard to develop department-specific staffing proposals, we moved forward on other issues at our last bargaining session.

Agreement on More Issues

Of the 16 “non-economic” proposals made by our negotiating committee, we have reached tentative agreements on all but a few!

Some of the highlights were that management agreed to our proposal on job postings and we reached agreement on improved career enhancement processes.

Management Still Refuses to Agree to a Strong Voice for RNs

Gaining full union security will mean a stronger voice for nurses to advocate for our patients and our profession.

As frontline caregivers, we deserve respect, not only for the hard work we do every day, but also for the insight we can bring to improving our hospital and the care our patients receive.

“I feel we need a strong voice to be listened to. We have had big changes and too often our words are falling on deaf ears. I feel my family of patients needs the best care and I need respect for the job I do.”
